Views are the news at Odyssey Towers

A view forever — that's the slogan at The Odyssey Towers in Surrey. "Most people don't think there is a view in Surrey," says saleswoman Carel McLeod. "Then they come to us and look out the window."

For a while, McLeod even stayed open late so people could see "all the twinkling lights of the city."

The panorama from the new condo tower rivals vistas to be found anywhere in Greater Vancouver.

The North Shore mountains fill the giant picture windows of apartments facing north. To the east are the Golden Ear Mountains.

To the south looms everyone's favorite volcano, Mount Baker. The western view isn't hard on the eyes either — the SkyTrain humming through the undulating green topography of Surrey and, in the distance, the towers and cables of the Alex Fraser Bridge.

Twenty-one floors of terra cotta concrete and glass, Odyssey Towers stands alone on a quiet no-through avenue in an area of newish lowrises, a mere stroll from Surrey city centre. It's the only tall building for miles, and McLeod says there's no chance another developer will put up anything tall enough or close enough to threaten the panorama.

If the views are forever, the building seems constructed to last for a long time, too.

Lark Group's chief Larry Fisher clearly opened his wallet when he built Odyssey Towers.

It's evident from the moment one enters the elegant and airy two-storey lobby, with its hotel-style seating area and floor-to-ceiling glass. Even the wide corridors are lavish. Lit by retro-deco wall lamps, they feature crown mouldings and vinyl wallpaper.

The higher you go in the tower, the larger and more lavish the spreads get. In all, there are 13 floorplans. From the second to 12th level, each floor has seven suites; from 14 to 19 there are four; the top two each boast two.

Fisher himself owns a penthouse on the 21st floor. Besides filling it with expensive designer flourishes such as the granite island in the kitchen, Fisher opted to build a staircase and punch through the ceiling to a secluded roof-top deck. High above Surrey, the owner can relax in the hot tub, raised high enough between the second and 12th floors.

The show suites are on the eighth level.

The two-bedroom B-style unit is particularly warm, well laid-out and bright — though it's not on a corner.

Its shape is much like an "E" in block capitals.

The bottom "leg," if you will, comprises the living-dining area and ceramic-tiled foyer. Neither area is overly large, but a window carving off one corner creates an illusion of space, letting in more light and widening the vista (the master bedroom has the same trick).

The middle leg of the E includes the second bedroom and the kitchen. Floorplan schematics list an eating nook, but only two could realistically sit down to breakfast, squeezed into one corner. Taken as a whole, though,
