Unique design is key at Sixth and Willow, the latest offering by Ken-stone Properties, says project sales director Janet Frost.

"It's really incredible modern architecture," says Frost, standing inside the development's 8th Avenue sales office. "And a great location."

So great, she says, the development was named for its address.

"It's pride in the location," says Frost, smiling.

"It's very distinctive. It's an incredible location and we wanted to share it with everyone."

The two, three-storey buildings that make up Sixth and Willow will include 25 townhomes, ranging from 1,399 square feet to 1,741 square feet. Homes start at $1,099,900.

Sixth and Willow features a contemporary West Coast look, with plenty of glass, concrete and clean lines punctuated by a sculptural-looking, weathering steel screen on the west corner.

This is both striking and practical.

"At an oblique angle, the weathered steel facade screens; at a direct angle it reveals," says architect Michael Green, principal of Michael Green Architecture.

"Form and function seamlessly unite."

The sales kit describes it as a "living statement."

"Form and function seamlessly unite."

The sales kit describes it as a "living statement."

"For architectural enthusiasts, the design is uniquely West Coast and inspired by the spectacular location," it says.

"The delicate screen with strong rhythmic lines provides privacy and creates a bold silhouette. The distinctive colours - weathering steel, aluminum and concrete - are juxtaposed against the soft green landscaping of the internal courtyard."

The building's look fits its location well, says Frost.

"I think it will stand out and be architecturally significant," says Frost, standing next to a scale model of Sixth and Willow, along with salespeople Richard Alvarez and Nancy Chen.

Buyers appreciate how it looks, says Alvarez: "People think it's a refreshing design."

He points to the model, highlighting some of the functional qualities of the Sixth and Willow design, adding the weathering steel grid offers privacy, shade and soundproofing.

Buyers are also impressed by the location, says Frost.

"You can walk to everything," she says. "This feels like a real neighbourhood."

Parks, schools, restaurants, boutiques and coffee shops are nearby and the site is close to hip areas like Granville Island, Fairview Slopes and Cambie Village.

The seawall and False Creek are both within strolling distance, and the project is also near public transit, including the SkyTrain and bus routes.

Sixth and Willow will appeal to a wide range of urban home shoppers, says Frost, everyone from older couples looking to downsize to new or growing young families, on the hunt for a good location and a little more space.

Buyers can choose from two bed-room, three-bedroom or four-bed-room townhomes, with floor-to-ceiling windows and a choice of two colour schemes, one lighter and one darker.

"It's rare that you see these sizes of townhomes being built in this area," says Chen. "This location is very suitable for people looking for the urban lifestyle."

Interiors at Sixth and Willow feature clean lines and modern-looking finishings.

The sales office showcases a sample of a kitchen, with a roomy and bright look.

It features an undermount stain-less sink, set in a quartz countertop with a standard stainless appliance package, including a Liebherr stain-less fridge, AEG gas cooktop and wall oven, an integrated wood-panel AEG dishwasher and a Panasonic microwave.

"This is all the standard finishing," says Frost. "What you see is what you get."

Kitchens are simple and chic with linear Italian cabinetry in either soft oak or white laminate, with soft-close door and drawer hardware, illuminated by recessed counter lighting.

Throughout homes, buyers will find brushed oak flooring.

Bathrooms will include floor-to-ceiling tile, low-flow dual-flush toilets, pot lighting and frameless glass showers, with rain shower heads and heated stone floors.

Most homes will have two parking stalls, as well as optional secure storage underground.

And they come stocked with an AEG stacking washer and dryer, as well as floor-to-ceiling roller blinds.

The two buildings are connected by a Japanese-inspired courtyard, and some homes have private roof decks.

"You've got everything at your door-step," says Frost.

"You're close to downtown - not in it."

You're at Sixth and Willow.

The Fairview Slopes neighbourhood is an especially liveable part of Vancouver, with its walkable, tree lined streets, great views of the city and North Shore mountains and proximity to the downtown core.

So unique is the design of the latest offering by Kenstone Properties, says project sales director Janet Frost, that the development was named for its address - Sixth and Willow.

"It's really incredible modern architecture," Frost says, "and a great location."

When Michael Green Architecture (MGA) associate Jordan van Dijk got together with MGA architect Michael Green and Michelle Biggar of Mcfarlane Green Biggar, the trio put their heads together to envision what the townhouses at Sixth and Willow would look like.

"The exterior and interior of the design tried to respond, not only to Vancouver's modern sensibility, but also to creating a quiet, calm and natural context for people living on the edge of the energy and urban disposition of the downtown core," Green says.

When designing the interiors, the team felt the location was a key consideration.

"This is a building with a unique story on its exterior, interesting views from inside to out," van Dijk says. "The interior finishes were chosen to complement the natural setting outside, the Japanese maple and ground cover choices in the landscape and the natural light in the homes." The result is a project with three integrated sensibilities - a signature modern exterior facing Sixth, a quiet interior community courtyard for the residents, and finally, a very fresh natural and quiet palette for the home interiors.

"The interiors have a classic and elegant simplicity to them that allow them to adapt to each homeowner's unique style," Green says.

"A well designed interior should provide an elegant backdrop for a homeowner's individual sensibility; the proverbial blank canvas for their personality. Oak floors, natural stone, white walls, clean modern fixtures all build that canvas."

Van Dijk agrees. Both Green and van Dijk believe that Sixth and Willow will appeal to a wide range of age groups and lifestyles.

"To some degree this was a driver in the design," van Dijk says. "We also wanted to design for the couple interested in living close to downtown as much as the family looking to be near parks and schools. That diverse range demanded a classic simple design that adapts and grows with the homeowner's changing lifestyle."

Rather than go for trendy accessories and fittings, they went for classic modern ones.

"We designed the look and feel around endurance and durability; hallmarks of a property that a homeowner will be proud of today, tomorrow and 20 years from now," says van Dijk.
