Port Coquitlam's Fremont Blue takes bold step

Fremont Blue project interior a mix of colourful contrasts

When designers decorate new-home project show suites, they aim to help make visitors feel as if they belong there.

Neutral colours, soft whites, and tone-on-tone colours in the decor and finishes set a calm vibe and help buyers imagine themselves at home.

When Insight Design worked with Mosaic Homes to craft the interiors of the three display townhomes in the 75-unit Fremont Blue phase of Port Coquitlam's Fremont Riverfront District master-planned community, the team created interiors full of light and soothing neutrals.

In one three-bedroom suite, however, Insight Design principal designer Kari Henshaw stepped out of the proverbial box to present the unexpected: bright reds and blues, dominant pop art on the walls and whimsical, fun details in nearly every room. If the first display suite is a serene welcome home, its three-bedroom neighbour is all about creativity, high energy and fun.

"Neutrals in their various shades have been very current over the last several years and while it may appear to be 'safe', it's always a great backdrop to accentuate the highlights of a home, be it a wonderful collection of art, a stunning view or a fireplace feature," Henshaw says.

"In (the bright pop-art) suite, colour became the neutral while black and white served to frame the space and allow the colour to really pop. Without the white it would play down the contrast and feel less fresh."

The kitchen is fitted with stone countertops, sleek wooden cabinets and a Whirlpool stainless-steel appliance package. It's large enough to fit a built-in breakfast nook complete with a television, and plush bench and backrest, with a large Warhol-esque portrait of repeating ketchup bottles.

In the dining room, Henshaw managed to use silver, bright blue and yellows with restraint.

Even with such a colourful print on the wall on the living space just steps away, these sunnier colours don't distract.

The success of the dining and living spaces lies in layering materials and adding contrasts and opposites in the furnishings.

"We have combined textured chairs with a glass and metal table, opposed matte and polished lacquer, ceramic items with plants, as well as family photos and books to highlight the character of the space."

In the blue boy's bedroom upstairs, Batman has invaded: cushion and bed coverings are festooned with superhero-comic graphics, and a pattern of small 3D Caped Crusader masks line a striking blue wall.

Here, too, colour is the catalyst, the ingredient that lifts the spirits.

"Colours all play a different role psychologically," Henshaw says.

"It's often said that red agitates and blue calms and relaxes, but it all depends on the tone of the colour, as well."

Port Coquitlam's Fremont Blue draws crowds

Saltbox architecture, lush surroundings and tons of amenities

BY MARY FRANCES HILL, SPECIAL TO THE SUN SEPTEMBER 16, 2013

Exterior of Fremont Blue, a Port Coquitlam townhome project by developer Mosaic Homes.

Mosaic Homes' Fremont Riverfront District master-planned community gives a whole new meaning to the concept of the back yard.

And what a back yard.

Already, homeowners who live in the first phase of the Port Coquitlam neighbourhood are enjoying life next to the pinnacle of natural landscapes: a pedestrian path, family-oriented parks, the 25-kilometre Traboulay nature trail, a dense, lush protected park reserve that serves as an eagle habitat, and, of course, the blue waters of the Pitt River.

If history repeats itself, Mosaic Homes will see hungry homebuyers camped outside its presentation centre doors when the second phase of construction is ready for sales. Last May, hopeful homebuyers pitched tents in anticipation of the first selling day for the first group of townhomes. No doubt propelled by the lure of nature, sales were brisk, according to Geoff Duyker of Mosaic Homes.

He says the early success of Phase 1 (called Fremont Blue, together with this 48-home second phase) serves as a reminder that buyers are savvy, and can envision a larger community once it's complete.

The luscious natural setting, the homes' architecture and the long-term growth of the community were magnets for Jaeyoung Kim and his young family.

Kim, 29, his wife Yunah and their young children moved into a two-bedroom-and-den townhome at Fremont Blue's first phase in mid-August. The family had been living with his parents while they looked for the perfect family home. They're convinced they found it in the corner-lot home with a spacious back yard and the coveted bucolic view, he says.

"I look outside and all I can see is the river and the parks," says the father of two, aged two-and-a-half and eight months. He's looking forward to watching his kids grow up in this setting.

"When they're older, I can stand inside my home and watch them play in the park," he adds with a laugh.

By the time the entire Fremont project is complete it will be a bustling community with a total of 600 townhomes and apartments.

The city of Port Coquitlam has reserved space for a business park in front of the apartment buildings, a development that will take shape in the future.

Fremont Blue residents will have easy access to Fremont Village, a collection of big-box stores such as Wal-Mart and Canadian Tire, grocery stores and coffee shops.

Duyker stresses this is only the beginning.

"The Fremont neighbourhood is just starting to take shape. Only one-third of the retail commercial is built out and the first homes have just been completed," Duyker says.

"With more shops, jobs, homes and a private recreational club for homeowners all to come, those buying now understand that future buyers will place a premium on the completion of the neighbourhood."

The large presentation centre on Ranger Lane emphasizes the abundance of natural resources surrounding Fremont Blue. An aerial map illustrates the beauty of the green space, Pitt River water and dense greenery of the reserve. Next to the aerial view, a wall map plots distances between Fremont Blue and the sites of everyday essentials, such as shopping and schools. Two secondary schools and an elementary school stand within a 10-minute bike ride away.

If anyone's camping out Saturday, they may well be buyers attracted to those townhomes with a view to the park reserve, individuals who appreciate the value of a recreational hub on-site next door.

A large swath of land is levelled and ready for construction of the Riverclub, a 12,500-square-foot facility that will include a fitness centre, a gym large enough for basketball, badminton and floor hockey games, a study room, a children's play room and an adult games area. Once complete, it will stand beside an outdoor pool with a lounge area, community garden plots and include a bike-share program and a dog wash.

The homes' architecture is just as appealing for buyers as the natural surroundings, Duyker says.

The homes are designed in the "saltbox" architectural style, common on the East Coast and so named for its resemblance to colonial salt containers, which sported slanting lids. The homes have pitched gable roofs, and large windows with prominent frames that add depth. Brick and shingle details and raised front entries under suspended metal canopies add to its striking curb appeal.

"This is our first time building townhomes showcasing our contemporary saltbox architecture," Duyker says.

"We've applied the same principles from our well-known historic styles, like home individuality, memorable entrances, layers of landscaping and oversized windows, but we've applied contemporary materials, shapes and details.”

Insight Design has decorated the three-bedroom townhome to reflect the lifestyle of a fun, cultured, pop art-loving young family, while Cristina Oberti did the finishings for the homes.

The kitchen is raised by two steps from the living room, giving the living room 10-foot ceilings. It's fitted with stone countertops, sleek wooden cabinets and a Whirlpool stainless-steel appliance package; the dining space is wide enough for a built-in kitchen nook like the colourful one installed by Insight Design.

Depending on the plan, homebuyers can enjoy a kitchen with a peninsula, a breakfast nook, flat-panel cabinetry, and his-and-hers sinks in the ensuite bathroom depending on the floor plan.

In the three-bedroom show home, wide panel tiles in the shower and bathtub areas add a sleek, luxurious quality to the bathrooms.

A two-bedroom show home features a laundry room off the entry-level foyer while the three-bedroom model features laundry closets on the top floor.

The two-bedroom homes come with a one-car garage indoors and room for one car outside, while the three-bedroom models include tandem indoor garages.

Those who don't drive will be able to cycle or carpool to the planned Evergreen SkyTrain line, which will be about 10 minutes away.

Duyker says Fremont Blue's position between the urban (amenities and shopping) and the natural (neighbouring the park reserve and Pitt River) makes it a unique community in the region.

“It's distinct in Metro Vancouver as it's located on a river, within walking distance to shops and restaurants, and it's a bridgeless commute to Vancouver and Burnaby.”
