RDG Management Ltd. has officially launched sales at Alexander Square, its master-planned mid-rise condo community across from Langley's Willoughby Town Centre.

The latest project from the long-running builder encompasses 308 suites, including a selection of L-plan corner homes with some that provide sweeping mountain views.

There are two- and three-bedroom condos available, and the latter have family-friendly designs that use the main living space as a buffer between bedrooms for added privacy and quiet.

Pricing is also well below what you would typically pay for a new home in Greater Vancouver, where the average resale price remains over $1 million. Available suites are priced between $313,900 to over $635,900, putting home ownership within reach for many who might otherwise be priced out of Canada's most expensive market.

Residents will be able to take advantage of multiple exclusive amenities, including a community garden, fitness facility, expansive rooftop deck, bicycle storage, landscaped courtyard and an off-leash dog park.

The community is also rising in the midst of a broader transformation that is seeing new businesses, housing, and amenities come to redefine the area. Nearby Yorkson Park, which was recently completed, gives neighbourhood residents extra green space and walking trails, and Willoughby Town Centre is dotted with restaurants, shops, grocers, and more.

RDG management has accumulated many awards over its half-century of operation. Earlier this year, RDG won Best Multi-Family Low Rise Development for The Ridge at Bose Farms at the Georgie Awards.
